THE PROBLEM: Too many web pages to look at. I'd like one place where I can see everything that I'm interested in.

THE SOLUTION:

The screenshot shows a Google homepage with several RSS feeds added to the top navigation bar. The feeds include:

- kurtwagner's books from LibraryThing: Links to books like 'Tom Swift In the Caves of Nuclear Fire' and 'The Winds of Change'.
- NASA Image of the Day: Links to 'Crew Wraps Up Launch Practice'.
- DIGG: A list of articles with digg counts, such as 'Ubuntu Weekly Newsletter #67' (46 diggs) and 'The Myth of 'Light' Cigarettes' (101 diggs).
- GCal - Kurt Wagner: A calendar view for Kurt Wagner with events like 'Ref Desk' and 'Faculty Senate'.
- Today's Woot!: A daily deal for 'Jabra C820s Noise Canceling Headphones'.
- NPR Topics: News: Links to news items like 'Harmonicas Shipped to Troops in Iraq'.

1. Create a Google account – free, easy, and powerful.
2. Begin to populate your page with information that you value. Some popular examples:

Three examples of popular RSS feeds are shown:

- Weather forecasts: A weather widget for New York, NY showing a high of 48.0°.
- Date & time: A clock widget showing the date as Tuesday, February 28.
- News: The CNN.com logo.

3. That's it! Click "Add Stuff" to find more features.

A close-up of the Google homepage top bar. A red arrow points to the "Add stuff" link, which is used to add new RSS feeds to the page.

4. If a web page that interests you has a link that says "RSS feeds" with this icon , right-click the icon, select "copy shortcut" and paste it here:

The "Add RSS feed" dialog box is shown. It contains a text input field with "http://", an "Add" button, and a link to "Information for Feed owners - Developers".
